Being an Empowered Teacher:

In the evolving landscape of education, the role of a teacher has transcended beyond mere dissemination of knowledge. Teachers today are seen as mentors, guides, and catalysts for change. During the session pivotal themes such as accountability, responsibility, and the timeless concept of Guru Dharma were highlighted, shedding light on what it means to be an empowered teacher in contemporary times.

Accountability and responsibility form the cornerstone of effective teaching. Chairman Sir emphasized that teachers must not only be accountable for their actions and decisions but also take responsibility for the outcomes of their students. Accountability involves a commitment to uphold high standards of teaching and learning, ensuring that educational objectives are met and students are supported in their academic and personal growth. Responsibility, on the other hand, entails being proactive in addressing the needs of students, adapting teaching methods to diverse learning styles, and continuously improving one's skills through professional development.

The concept of Guru Dharma, deeply rooted in ancient Indian tradition, encapsulates the ethical and moral duties of a teacher. Chairman Sir eloquently described Guru Dharma as the guiding principle that defines the relationship between a teacher and their students. It emphasizes compassion, patience, and a genuine desire to nurture students' potential. Under Guru Dharma, a teacher is seen not just as an instructor but as a mentor who shapes the character and values of their students. This holistic approach to teaching fosters an environment where students feel respected, valued, and inspired for instance, in Indian tradition, the Guru was held in the highest regard, often equated with divinity. This historical context underscores the enduring significance of the teaching profession and its impact on societal development.

Chairman Sir also shared contemporary insights on the evolving role of technology in education. He emphasized the importance of integrating digital tools to enhance learning experiences and the need for teachers to be adept at navigating these technologies. However, he cautioned that technology should complement, not replace, the human touch that is crucial in education.

Being an empowered teacher today involves a blend of accountability, responsibility, and adherence to the principles of Guru Dharma. It requires a commitment to personal and professional growth, an understanding of the profound impact teachers have on their students, and a willingness to embrace change while maintaining the core values of the teaching profession. Chairman Sir's address was a compelling reminder of the noble responsibilities that teachers carry and the profound difference they make in shaping future generations.

Celebrating events like this helps eliminate negative thoughts among students and brings clarity to their minds. Your profession as a teacher is a wonderful gift. You are the second parents of the students. Through you, they see the real world. You are their mentors, guides, friends, trainers, leaders, and everything. You are worthy of being revered. Therefore, you must carry out your duties with dedication, responsibility, and devotion. A society where teachers are revered and celebrated is a society that flourishes and prospers. The traditions and customs we followed in ancient times were aimed at nurturing our heritage, culture, and values in the minds of children and students. However, over time, those old good practices have started to fade away. Therefore, as teachers, you must teach the students to respect elders, teachers, and scholars. When you do so, your virtues, skills, and knowledge will reflect in the students, elevating their values. Only you, as teachers, can bring about significant changes in students because of your genuine concern and effective teaching. Your small encouragement and efforts can become major factors in students' success. It is only through your teaching abilities that students can acquire world-class education and knowledge. At the same time, you must continue to improve yourselves daily. Only then can you stand out as exceptional professors. I wish you all success in your journey to becoming even better teachers.”

Following this, students expressed their love and respect for their teachers by performing the traditional practice of “Paatha Pooja” (worshipping the feet of their teachers).
